welcome

Mailto links, and email addresses hidden behind them, are also very easy to harvest. Endless amounts of bots crawl websites day and night and they add to their long lists whatever even resembles an email address. Since a mailto link is directly encoded into a web page, they can collect an email behind it within milliseconds.

This can lead to obvious abuse, usually in the form of an endless wave of unwanted messages in your inbox. You could try to obfuscate the address with JavaScript or other methods to hinder the harvest. But, with already excellent spam filters put in place by reputable email clients, it may not be worth the effort. We discuss it in more detail in our article on email obfuscation.

By putting a mailto link out there, you also share your contact details with any legitimate outreach specialists that wish to reach you. Finding all your company emails hidden in the html code is as easy as a single tap on a hunter.io widget (many similar tools are also available).
